Peoples are proud because we exist!

They want to make us believe that our world has just one way and one direction; they uphold the rights of some while trampling on those of others. But we know that languages sprang up for people to understand one another, to create communities.

KORRIKA and other initiatives of its kind set out to make us feel part of a community, part of a people, because defending our language brings us together, whether we can speak it or not. In all our diversity, we've found something that brings us together: Basque*.

Rather than uniformity, we aspire to a plural, open world; we want to go anywhere without inhibitions of any kind, and we aim to make our own contribution: to enrich the world with our point of view, in our own words.

So, people take pride – we're proud of what we are and what we have! Let's get people moving, to get everything around us moving too. Because we exist, and because we exist because of the determination of our people.

Harro herri!

*Replace "Basque" here with the name of the language in question (the linguonym).
